The Grand Finale of Green in the City Series

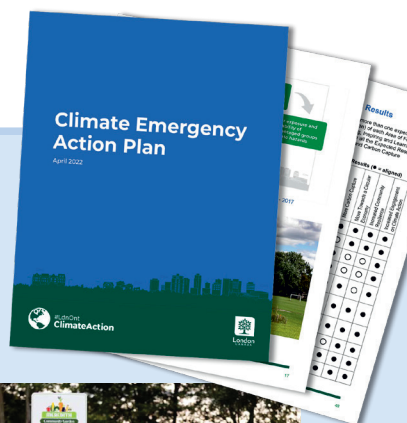

On April 4th we celebrated the final Green in the City event for the 2022/2023 series with a keynote presentation from former Weather Network host Chris St. Clair and a panel of weather professionals. Each speaker contributed to a discussion about London's changing weather forecast and what can be done to adapt to climate change. If you missed the event or want to watch it again, the recording will be made available soon at getinvolved.london.ca/climate.

Green in the City is an annual series of thought-provoking events, discussions and workshops organized by the City of London, London Environmental Network, and London Public Library.

Year 1 Progress Report

April 2023 marked one year since London's Climate Emergency Action Plan was unanimously endorsed by City Council. It is the City's first comprehensive climate action plan addressing both mitigation and adaptation. We have done a lot of work to reduce emissions and prepare for severe weather.
